The Common Frame of Reference:
A View from Law & Economics

edited by Gerhard Wagner

2003

Sohl, European law publishers
Consumer Law in the DCFR

Carsten Herresthal

1. Introduction
   1. The need for a revision of EC consumer law
   2. Consumer law as kaleidoscope of the core issues of private law

II. The Principle of consumer protection in the DCFR
   1. The function of consumer protection in the DCFR
   2. The Wrong concept of harmonisation
      a) Generalization of consumer law
      b) Generalization of the Acquis rules
         a1) Generalizing rules suited for minimum harmonization
         b1) Generalizing Rules suited for the vertical (Sectoral) approach to harmonization
      cc) The lack of a coherent set of rules
   3. Deviations of the DCFR from the Acquis towards more consumer protection
      a) Inaccurate definitions of consumer and business
      b) Pre-contractual duties to inform and remedies
      c) The right of withdrawal
      d) Consumer contracts
      e) Special rules in case consumer involved in transaction

III. The core issues of consumer law in the DCFR
   1. The model consumer underlying the rules of the DCFR ("Verbraucherleitbild")
      a) Different paradigms of consumer protection in EC law 1b) The revival of the role based model of consumer protection in the DCFR
   2. Consumer welfare as an independent objective
      a) Consumer welfare as secondary aim under EC Law
      b) The principle of solidarity as core aim in the DCFR
   3. Consumer law, freedom of contract and social justice
      a) Formal private law versus welfare state model
      b) The weak position of freedom of contract in the DCFR
         aa) Mandatory rules
         bb) The Right of withdrawal
         cc) Standard clauses
   4. Areas of special private law ("Sonderprivatrecht") and private law in general

* Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München (Germany).
IV. Economics of consumer protection and the rules of the DCFR

1. The economic analysis of consumer protection law
   a) Extensive consumer protection as necessary compensation of market failures
   b) Rules on consumer protection as exceptional means to promote markets
   aa) The use of market instruments to cope with the information problem
   bb) The economics of harmonization of consumer protection law

2. DCFR and the role of economic analysis of consumer protection law
   a) The limited value of economics of consumer protection
   b) The limited use of the economics of consumer protection by the DCFR

V. Conclusion

1. Introduction

The presentation of the Draft Common Frame of Reference (henceforth "DCFR")¹ was the incident in the field of European private law that drew most attention in the present decade. Nevertheless, up to now the issue of consumer law in the DCFR has only been shortly touched upon.² This is quite remark-
