

New Directions in World Englishes Research

Series Editor: Sarah Buschfeld

Maps the full scale of contemporary World Englishes research, reflecting the latest linguistic developments and realities of the global spread of English

- Widens the traditional boundaries of World Englishes research by prioritizing work that integrates non-PCE contexts and other emergent contexts of English
- Combines traditional as well as methodologically and conceptually innovative approaches
- Encourages multidisciplinary and extended perspectives to cover the developments and usage contexts of English in their entirety
- Champions innovative research from both established scholars and early career researchers

This series captures the developments and new trajectories of World Englishes research. It covers traditional perspectives and phenomena but also ventures beyond this, with a particular focus on work that examines non-PCEs and other emergent contexts such as hybrid Englishes, digital Englishes and grassroots Englishes. It also utilizes methodologies and approaches from other linguistic and non-linguistic disciplines.

The series expands the traditional World Englishes paradigm by encouraging multidisciplinary perspectives and adopting a deliberately broad conception of the notion of World Englishes – one that treats any variety, language form, or mode of communication that is rooted in the English language as worthwhile and important to be included in the paradigm.

Find out more and submit a proposal:

edinburghuniversitypress.com/new-directions

EDINBURGH
University Press

