Examination deadlines (Examination regulation § 22)

The master's program should generally be completed at the end of the fourth semester. If the program (incl. the master's thesis) cannot be completed by the end of the sixth semester, then modules which have not yet been successfully completed and the master's thesis will be considered completed and failed at the first attempt. If those outstanding credits are not completed by the end of the eighth semester, then the master's assessment is considered conclusively failed.

Should a student miss the deadlines for reasons beyond the student's control, then, upon written request, the examination committee will grant an extension. The reasons are to be asserted and supported by the candidate without delay.
