[1] If you have a hippopotamus major in your brain, you are no ape, though you had four hands, no feet, and were more apish than the apes of all aperies. But if a hippopotamus major is ever discovered in one single ape's brain, nothing will save your great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great-greater-greatest-grand-mother from having been an ape too.

Am I satyr or man?
Pray tell me who can,
And settle my place in

A man in ape's shape
An anthropoid ape
Or a monkey deprived of

Punch, 18. Mai 1861

[3] He had gone through the jungle on his all-fours, but when he saw our party he erected himself, and looked us boldly in the face. [...] And now truly he reminded me of nothing but some hellish dream creature – a being of that hideous order, half-man, half-beast, which we find pictured by old artists in some representations of the infernal regions. [...] With a groan which had something terribly human in it, and yet was full of brutishness, he fell forward on his face.

The Boy's Own Magazine (Juni 1861)

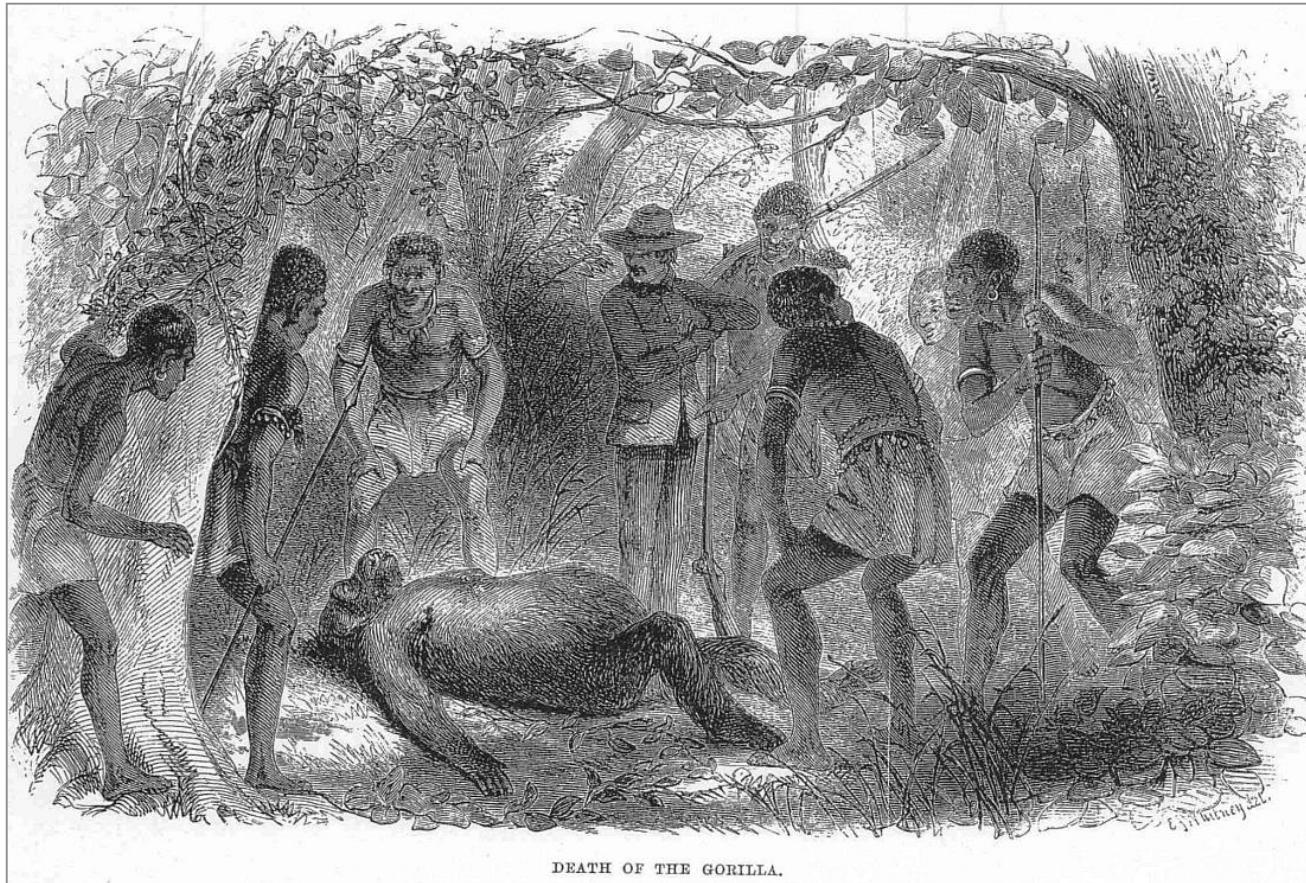

[4] There is enough likeness to humanity in this beast to make a dead one an awful sight [...]. It was as though I had killed some monstrous creation, which yet had something of humanity in it. Well as I know that this was an error, I could not help the feeling.

Gorilla Hunters (1861)
(Ausgabe von 1884)

[5] He [the gorilla] stood about a dozen yards from us, and was a sight I think I shall never forget. Nearly six feet high [...] with immense body, huge chest, and great muscular arms, with fiercely-glaring large deep gray eyes, and a hellish expression of face, which seemed to me like some nightmare vision, – thus stood before us this king of the African forest.

du Chaillu, Explorations and Adventures (1861)

[6] Of all the hideous creatures I had ever seen or heard of, none came up in the least degree to this. Apart altogether from its gigantic size, this monster was calculated to strike terror into the hearts of beholders simply by the expression of its visage, which was quite satanic. [...] It seemed as if I were gazing on one of those hideous creatures one beholds when oppressed with nightmare.

Ballantyne, Gorilla Hunters (1861)

[7] I shuddered as I looked upon it, for there was something terribly human-like about it, despite the brutishness of its aspect.

R.M. Ballantyne, The Gorilla Hunters (1861)

[8] It was a female gorilla, with a baby gorilla in her arms. Fierce and hairy though she was, there was a certain air of tenderness about this mother, as she stroked and pawed her little one, that went straight to my heart, and caused me almost involuntarily to raise my arm and strike up the muzzle of Makarooroo's gun, at the moment he pulled the trigger.

[9] “I feel almost like a murderer,” Frank said; “it is so like a man. From this day and for evermore, I believe in Darwin’s theory: we are descended doubtless from gorillas.”

“Doubtless,” Dick assented. “I feel ashamed of myself for being so like a brute.”

“Shall Sambo cut it up?” the black asked, dancing about in great joy. “Part ob gorilla berry good eat.”

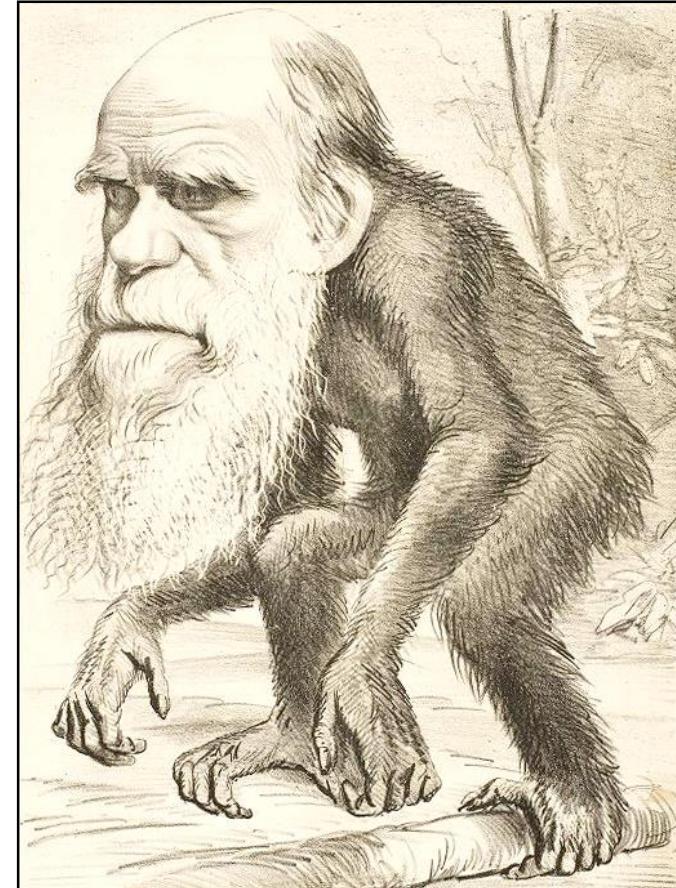

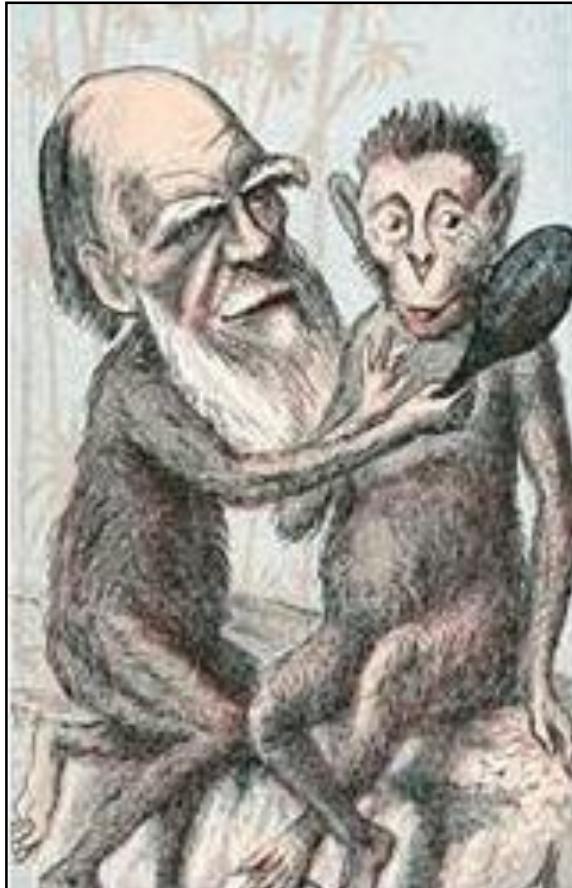

“But,” Frank said, “I should feel like a cannibal. No, let it lie there. [...]”

[10] ... for there is no knowing what he is until some of these learned gentlemen have decided how to classify him. If he's an aborigine, I should like him to be treated as a Christian. [...] I suppose we must rig him out in a sailor's outfit, for it would hardly do to mast-head him, when in port, without having some kind of a decent suit thrown over him.

[11.1] And now, as our readers probably imagine that man and the gorilla are similar in many respects, let us proceed to show what a vast difference there is in reality between them.
